

Ruskin College, Oxford

Ruskin College, Oxford

Ruskin College runs further and higher education courses for adult learners, particularly those who have had no previous access to education at this level. This new project involves consolidating their campus which is currently split across two sites, to a single campus on the Headington site.

We have undertaken extensive consultation with planners, users and the local community about the proposals for the College on the new site which includes listed buildings and is set in a beautiful 19C landscape setting.

Our design for a new extension to the Listed Rookery building will accommodate the College's main teaching and learning spaces and includes significant alteration and refurbishment to the listed building, removing poor quality additions and enabling an elegant transition between listed and new spaces. The masterplan for the whole site takes into consideration the experience of both students and staff walking around the site, accommodates parking, improved access, delivery and below ground services, whilst enhancing the setting of the Listed buildings and the existing mature trees, creating new external spaces for the College.

The scheme is generated from our sustainability principles to reduce energy demand and will be designed to be low carbon and BREEAM excellent.
